HOW THIS LA COUPLE SPENT THEIR DAYS IN PANDEMIC LOCK-DOWN

By Monique Stockmeyer

Entertainment Couple Grant and Jessica George have always had a knack for the arts. They are also self-proclaimed Foodies. Together with their friends, they partake in learning all the hot-shot-spot restaurants in and around LA. From hole-in-the-wall noodle joints on side-streets in DTLA, to Be Seen in the Hollywood Scene rooftop excursions, these guys love to try and tout.

During the lockdown, that hobby came to a screeching halt. With their work schedules opened, they began learning new hobbies online. There were piano lessons, singing lessons, knitting lessons, writing lessons, lessons on how to change car batteries, and fishing lessons. But, what delighted them the most was the infinite amount of information about everything they could possibly ever learn being at their fingertips.

One quiet afternoon, the two found themselves engrossed in watching someone construct a salami rose which was then surrounded by an array of other fruits, cheeses and nuts. It was simple. It was elegant, and it was GENIUS! The light bulbs went ON!!!

After months of studying, learning and perfecting new board techniques, Los Angeles Charcuterie was born. When you look at the examples at LosAngelesCharcuterie.com, you will agree that the love that gets poured into the boards is very apparent. Each Charcuterie Board is uniquely different. Everything from the actual wooden boards to the utensils, are reusable and sustainable. And every board is wrapped with wire ribbon and living roses. The ingredients that make these edible masterpieces are purchased from local farmers and growers. There are even clever choices for those who are continuing to be conscious of social distancing.

The descriptions of their item choices are giggle makers, like that of their medium board: "Oh, look out! Get ready for the barrage of flying compliments when you present this jaw-dropping, sexy, life-impacting, conversation-igniting board. You'll find yourself newly crowned the Grande Dame or Major Domo of Charcuterie, a distinction you most definitely earned by bringing this breathtaking masterpiece to the helm!" The two have maintained a Mom and Pop style, being hands-on and communicative from the moment you order, to the time you pick up or they personally hand deliver in a cold box.
